Nike cutting 2% jobs as part of Business Rejig

Nike is cutting about 2% of its workforce as the athletic brand revamps global operations, part of a bid to move faster and ward off competition from Adidas AG and Under Armour.

The overhaul is an attempt to speed up product development and refocus on key markets, CEO Mark Parker said in a statement on Thursday. Nike had more than 70,000 jobs at the end of fiscal 2016, suggesting that the cuts could affect about 1,400 workers.

The cutbacks follow disappointing sales in its most recently reported quarter, a sign that competitors are making inroads. Nike faces a resurgent Adidas, which has regained its cachet in the US, along with the expansion of Under Armour into new athletic-gear categories. Against that backdrop, Nike's closely watched futures orders fell 1% — the first drop since 2009.

The slump has prodded Parker to take more dramatic actions to regain Nike's edge. Key to the strategy is focusing on its 12 most important cities: New York, London, Shanghai, Beijing, Los Angeles, Tokyo, Paris, Berlin, Mexico City, Barcelona, Seoul and Milan. They're expected to drive 80% of the brand's growth through 2020.

The shake-up didn't impress investors, who sent the shares down as much as 2.8% to $53.12. That was the biggest intraday decline in almost a month.

Nike also simplifying its regional organization. It plans to concentrate on four regions — North America; greater China; Europe, Middle East and Africa; and Asia Pacific and Latin America — down from six.

Princess Diana's shoes sell for 1,800 pounds at auction

A pair of white peep-toe shoes belonging to Princess Diana have fetched 1,800 pounds at an auction in the UK.

The white leather flat shoes are thought to have been worn by the late princess when she was 19 years old, during the time she worked as a nursery assistant.

The shoes were left by Diana at the house of an anonymous friend in about 1977—78.

There are photographs of her wearing similar shoes while working as a kindergarten teacher aged about 19, Dominic Winters Auction house said.

A note from the princess, discussing meditation and French philosophy, written on Kensington Palace notepaper sold for 1,400 pounds at the auction, 'BBC News' reported.

Other items in the auction included a candid letter written by Prince Charles two days after his separation from the princess, which was sent to interior designer Dudley Poplak.

Three other letters written by the prince fetched between 230 pounds and 320 pounds.
